INTRODUCTION

This Report, “The Puerto Rico Tax Expenditure Report For Tax Year 2023” (PRTER23,) is the third tax expenditure report issued by the Puerto Rico Treasury Department. The first report, “The Puerto Rico Tax Expenditure Report For Tax Year 2017” (PRTER17) was published in June 2019. The second report, “The Puerto Rico Tax Expenditure Report for 2018” was published in May 2021.

This report provides a definition for “tax expenditures”, describes the method used to identify tax expenditures, and provides a list of tax expenditures with estimates of their cost. New estimates are provided for the cost of tax expenditures for the tax years 2019 through 2023 and revised estimates for the tax years 2017 and 2018 for the major tax regimes in Puerto Rico; including personal income tax, business income tax, sales and use tax and excise tax. Tax expenditures attributable to Act No. 135 of December 2, 1997, as amended, (the “Tax Incentives Act of 1998”), to Act No. 73 of May 28, 2008, as amended, (the “Economic Incentives Act for the Development of Puerto Rico”) and to Act No. 60 of July 1, 2019, as amended, (The Puerto Rico Tax Incentives Code Act); appear in the corporate regime in this Report. However, they are inherently different from other corporate income tax expenditures in some very important ways; as a result, a separate discussion of these tax expenditures is included in Section III, Measurement of The Cost of Tax Expenditures.

PRTER23 includes new tax expenditures created by Act 257-2018, The 2018 Tax Reform Act and Act 60-2019, The Puerto Rico Incentives Code Act Act. Those same Acts repealed earlier legislation that created tax expenditures. Repealed tax expenditures are also identified in this Report. A table identifying these new and repealed tax expenditures is included in Section VI of this Report.

There are 438 tax expenditures that will exist under 2023 tax law for the tax regimes covered in this Report. An additional 25 tax expenditures have been repealed. Section VI of this Report includes the entire list of 463 tax expenditures and there costs.

The PRTER is an important tool to be used in conjunction with the annual budget of Puerto Rico. As discussed in more detail in Section II below, tax expenditures are an alternative to regular expenditures for pursuing policy objectives. However, unlike regular expenditures, tax expenditures are not presented in the annual budget of Puerto Rico. The PRTER complements the budget in that it completes the list of policies pursued and amounts expended. The goal has been to update the PRTER annually at approximately the time that the budget is being developed with estimates of the cost of tax expenditures though that budget year. With PRTER23 we accomplish that goal as it provides cost estimates of tax expenditures for tax year 2023 in early April of 2022 just as work on the fiscal year 2023 budget by the Puerto Rico government is commencing.

Our convention for naming tax expenditure reports is to name the report after the latest year of tax expenditures that are included in the Report. This Report is referred to as PRTER23 because the latest year for which tax expenditures is included is tax year 2023. The latest year for which tax expenditures is included for future reports will always coincide with the year for which the budget is being prepared at the time of the report's publication. PRTER23 is the first Puerto Rico Tax Expenditure Report to include forecasts of the cost of tax expenditures. At the time of completion of this Report, tax data and National Accounts data were only available through 2021, making it necessary to use forecasts of GNP to extrapolate tax data through 2023. A description of the methods used to forecast the cost estimates appears in Section III-D.

With this Report Treasury has modified the Tax Expenditure Budget (TEB) numbering system. A description of the new numbering system appears in Section VI. This Report includes tax expenditures and their cost estimates for all of the tax expenditures extant from 2017 through 2023 making it unnecessary to refer to the earlier Reports in order to obtain either a complete list of tax expenditures or a complete time series of their costs.

This Report is divided into six major sections: (i) Section I, The Definition of Tax Expenditures, describes how a tax expenditure is defined for purposes of the PRTER; (ii) Section II, The Tax Expenditures as Part of the Budget, explains the importance of this Report as part of the government budget process; (iii) Section III, The Measurement of the Cost of Tax Expenditures, explains how the cost of tax expenditures is estimated and includes a discussion of taxpayer behavior; (iv) Section IV, The Identification of Tax Expenditures and Benchmarking, describes the benchmarking process for each of the tax regimes included in this Report; (v) Section V, Future Editions of the PRTER, describes plans for future editions of the PRTER; (vi) Section VI, The Tax Expenditures Budget, includes the list of the tax expenditures and their costs in tabular form classified by tax regime, type of tax expenditure and budget category.

There are 437 tax expenditures that will exist under 2023 tax law for the tax regimes covered in this Report. An additional 26 tax expenditures have been repealed. Section VI of this Report includes the entire list of 463 tax expenditures and their costs.

The Office of Economic and Financial Affairs, or in Spanish, La Oficina de Asuntos Económicos y Financieros ("OAEF"), of the Treasury Department of Puerto Rico developed the tools and methods used to measure tax expenditures and prepared this report. This Report was prepared under the direction of Aixa Cruz, the Assistant Secretary of Treasury for OAEF. Major contributions were made by the staff of OAEF including Waheed Murad, Yecenia Collazo, Nelson López, Blanca Cintrón and Janny Robles. The staff of OAEF produced the estimates of the cost of tax expenditures that appear in this Report and developed the models that underlie those estimates. Significant contributions concerning legal citations, identification of tax expenditures and interpretation of the tax law were provided by Blanca Alvarez and Sandra Torres of the Internal Revenue Service. Comments were provided by other components of the Government of Puerto Rico. Gerald Silverstein, consultant to Treasury, provided both guidance and technical advice.

PUERTO RICO TAX EXPENDITURE REPORT

I. DEFINITION OF TAX EXPENDITURES

Tax expenditures as measured in Puerto Rico are revenue losses attributable to provisions of Act No. 1 of January 31, 2011, as amended, the Internal Revenue Code for a New Puerto Rico (the "PRIRC") that deviate from the tax structure's benchmark law. The revenue loss could be due to a special exclusion, deduction, exemption, credit, a preferential rate of tax, or a deferral of tax liability.

For purposes of the PRTER, the benchmark law is characterized only by the most fundamental aspects of a tax; the application of a general tax rate to a broadly defined tax base. Any departure from this benchmark that reduces tax revenues is considered a tax expenditure. This broad approach provides greater transparency by ensuring that information is being disclosed on a wide range of tax measures.

The Treasury staff uses its judgment to distinguish those income tax provisions that should be considered part of the benchmark tax law as opposed to those special provisions that result in tax expenditures.

II. TAX EXPENDITURES AS PART OF THE BUDGET

A tax expenditure is the result of the government's use of the tax system to pursue certain policy goals such as encouraging savings, stimulating employment, stimulating economic activity, encouraging foreign investment and protecting national industries. In such circumstances, the tax system fulfills a role like that of a spending program; however, unlike a spending program in which taxes are collected and spent by the government, a tax expenditure reduces revenues when the taxpayer engages in activities that further the policy goal. These revenue losses or tax expenditures may be viewed as alternatives to other policy instruments such as spending or regulatory programs.

The budget of Puerto Rico is an accounting tool that shows revenues on the receipts side of the budget and spending on the expenditures side of the budget. In the budget, a spending program created to achieve a policy goal appears on the expenditures side of the budget while revenues that are used to support the policy appear on the receipts side of the budget. A tax expenditure, on the contrary, does not appear in the budget at all. As a result, there is no spending program on the expenditures side of the budget and the amount of foregone revenues due to the tax expenditure is not accounted for on the receipts side of the budget. Therefore, a budget without a list of tax expenditures neither includes the entire set of programs that the government is engaged in nor the total amount of dollars spent on government programs.

For example, the deduction for medical expenditures is an exception to the benchmark income tax structure that reduces taxes. It is a tax expenditure that is a substitute for a spending program. Thus, when a policy goal, such as subsidizing individuals with medical expenses, is achieved through a tax expenditure, such initiative reduces taxes by an amount unspecified in the budget. Had there been no deduction for medical expenditures, that same policy could have been pursued through a spending program and there would have been additional revenues on the receipts side of the budget and a spending program showing the subsidies to individuals for medical expenses on the expenditure side of the budget.

The list of tax expenditures and their costs that appears in Section VI below is referred to as the Tax Expenditure Budget ("TEB"). As mentioned above, it is important that the TEB be considered along with the regular budget in order to have a complete list of government programs and expenditures. There are other reasons to produce a TEB. While spending programs are reviewed every year by both the legislature and the administration in order to prepare the regular budget, tax expenditures are embedded in the PRIRC, and since they are outside the budget, they are not considered when the budget is prepared. However, like all other governmental programs, tax expenditures should be continually subject to evaluation. The TEB provides a tool for that evaluation.

The public should be aware of the policies that their government is involved in and the TEB allows the public to better understand these policies. Tax expenditure analysis can help both policymakers and the public to understand the actual size of government, the uses to which government resources are put and the tax and economic policy consequences that follow from the implicit or explicit choices made in legislation.

Inclusion of a provision within the TEB is not an evaluation of the appropriateness of the policy but only a recognition that a program exists to pursue a policy goal even though it doesn't appear in the budget. Treasury emphasizes that in the process of listing tax expenditures, no judgment is made, nor any implication intended, about the desirability of any special tax provision as a matter of public policy.

III. MEASUREMENT OF THE COST OF TAX EXPENDITURES

III-A Measurement and Behavior

In this Report, the cost of tax expenditures is measured as "foregone revenue". Foregone revenue is the method used to measure the cost of tax expenditures by most states in the United States and foreign governments, including Latin American governments. Foregone revenue is the loss of revenue that occurs after a tax expenditure has been introduced. Each tax expenditure is measured as the difference between tax liability under present law and the tax liability that would result if the tax expenditure provision were eliminated.

Foregone revenue does not include the impact on tax revenues of behavioral response by the taxpayer to the loss of his tax preference. The foregone revenue method was specifically chosen by Treasury in order to avoid the considerable difficulty of measuring behavioral response to the elimination of the many tax expenditures presented in this Report. However, the omission of behavioural responses generates cost estimates and projections that may reduce the revenue gains that would result if a particular provision were eliminated since in many instances the removal of a tax expenditure would cause taxpayers to change their behaviour to minimize the amount of tax they would have to pay. Treasury understands that for most tax expenditures the impact of behavior is marginal and that it would not generally affect the ordinal ranking of the tax expenditures. Thus, this Report provides valuable information, even without including behavior in the cost of tax expenditures, by identifying tax expenditures and providing consistent measures of their cost.

The effects of behavior can be illustrated by considering the taxation of capital gains. If the lower tax rate for capital gains under current income tax law were increased, it is likely that taxpayers would react by postponing certain transactions on capital assets in order to reduce the burden of the resulting tax increase. This behavior would reduce the expected revenue gains for the government, an effect that is not taken into account when estimating the cost of this tax expenditure. It should be noted that a revenue estimate of legislation that would eliminate the lower capital gains tax rates would always take into consideration behavior. Thus, the value of the tax expenditure can be different from the estimated revenue gain that the government would project if it were to pass legislation to eliminate the preferential rate. Unlike the measures of tax expenditures presented in this report, all revenue estimates produced by Treasury take into consideration the impact of taxpayers' behavior on revenues.

Although behavior is not included in the measurement of tax expenditures in this Report, certain kinds of changes in a taxpayer's position as a result of the elimination of a tax expenditure is included in the measurement of tax expenditures. For example, as a result of the elimination of the deduction for medical expenditures, a taxpayer may move into a higher tax bracket. The methods used to measure the cost of a tax expenditure take this into consideration so that the additional revenues from moving to a higher tax bracket (or similar changes in a taxpayer's position) are included in the cost of a tax expenditure.

The estimates of the cost of tax expenditures presented in this report do not take into account their impact on the overall level of economic activity and the potential resulting impact on aggregate tax revenues. These kinds of impacts are frequently referred to as macroeconomic feedback or dynamic effects. Many tax expenditures are policies designed to increase economic activities that are expected to have significant positive effects on economic growth. The elimination of such tax expenditures may have a negative impact on economic growth fostering a decrease in aggregate tax revenues that may offset a part (or all) of the increase in revenues resulting from elimination of the tax expenditure. For example, eliminating a tax expenditure that encourages investment may decrease the amount of investment that, in turn, may decrease the amount of capital and its productivity and GDP ultimately decreasing tax revenues. Eliminating a tax expenditure would also mean that the government would have more funds available to increase spending, reduce taxes or pay down debt—actions that could have additional dynamic effects on the economy and on tax revenues. These possible dynamic effects from the elimination of tax expenditures are not considered when determining the cost of tax expenditures appearing in this Report.

III-B The Special Case of Foreign-Owned Incentive Corporations

The Incentive Acts, like any other tax law, are the result of legislation passed by the Legislative Assembly of Puerto Rico and signed by the Governor. The Incentive Acts generally lower the tax rate applicable to businesses whose operations qualify thereunder and sign an agreement thereof with the Government of Puerto Rico. The Incentive Acts are designed to encourage economic activity in Puerto Rico and the tax benefits provided clearly qualify as tax expenditures. The lower tax rates, accelerated deductions and the tax credits granted create a revenue loss in order to achieve the policies of encouraging foreign investment in Puerto Rico and stimulating economic growth. The count of tax expenditures created under the Incentive Acts can be found below in in Table 3 of Section VI, The Tax Expenditure Budget, while details about the foregone revenue attributable to the Incentive Acts and the legislation that created them can be found in Tables 4 and 5 of Section VI.

Approximately ninety-eight percent (98%) of the income taxed under the Incentive Acts is income generated by foreign-owned incentive corporations. Foreign-owned incentive corporations are corporations engaged in a trade or business in Puerto Rico pursuant to the provisions of one of the Incentive Acts and owned by foreign individuals or entities. The Incentive Acts provide a myriad of tax incentives for foreign-owned corporations to either locate or expand their businesses in Puerto Rico. For example, in return for increasing their economic activity in Puerto Rico, the tax rate applicable to foreign-owned corporations for income taxes significantly reduced. The tax rates appearing in the agreement are negotiated and must fall within a range of possible rates specified in the Incentive Acts. The qualifying corporation must file an incentive corporation income tax return which looks much like a regular corporate tax return. Incentive corporations are taxed much like regular corporations but at lower tax rates.

There is a significant difference between the measures of the tax expenditures attributable to the Incentive Acts and all other tax expenditures appearing in this Report. The difference is in the potential behavior of taxpayers in response to the elimination of the tax expenditure. As mentioned above, for most tax expenditures the behavior has a marginal effect on the cost of the tax expenditure. In the case of Incentive Act corporations, however, the potential behavior in response to elimination of the tax benefits thereof could have an impact that eliminates any potential gain in revenues resulting from elimination of the tax expenditure and may create significant dynamic reductions in the economy.

This behavior may be expected since most incentive corporations have a presence in many countries but choose to locate their operations in Puerto Rico mostly because of the very low tax rates and other tax benefits offered through the Incentive Acts. Were these preferences to be eliminated, the operations currently in Puerto Rico could be moved to other jurisdictions that also offer low tax rates and in which the parent corporations already have a presence; these jurisdictions are already competing with Puerto Rico for those operations. If the qualifying corporations were to move their operations from Puerto Rico, there would be significant dynamic effects felt throughout the economy.

Treasury has decided to include estimates of the cost of tax expenditures for the Incentive Acts in the TEB measured without behavior in the same way as any other tax expenditure. However, the elimination of the Incentive Acts would likely not increase tax revenues, but instead significantly decrease revenues because of the foreign-owned corporations' ability to relocate operations outside of Puerto Rico and the resulting significant dynamic reductions in the economy.

III-C The Non-Additive Nature Of Tax Expenditures

There are no totals shown for tax expenditures in this Report. The cost of a tax expenditure shown in this Report is measured assuming that every other tax expenditure remains unchanged. For example, the cost of the deduction for medical expenses is measured assuming that the charitable donations deduction remains intact. Consider a taxpayer that would remain in the same tax bracket if either the medical deduction or the charitable donations deduction was eliminated but would move into a higher income tax bracket if both were eliminated. In that case, the addition of the two independent estimates would be different (smaller) than an estimate if the tax expenditures were eliminated as a group. In general, the cost of a group of tax expenditures may not correspond to the sum of the cost of each independently measured tax expenditure in that group. This is true because tax measures interact with one another. For this reason, totals of tax expenditures are generally inaccurate and are not shown in this report.

III-D Data Sources and Measurement Techniques

In this Report there are three major sources of data used to estimate the cost of tax expenditures including: tax returns, national accounts data and GNP forecasts. Tax returns are the best source of information about tax expenditures. However, tax returns are not available for all years included in this report. When tax returns are not available national accounts data is generally used to extrapolate the latest available year of tax returns. National accounts data include measures of GNP and the various components of national product and national income compiled by the Puerto Rico Planning Board from actual measures of economic activity and published in the appendix to the Governor's Budget Publication.

PRTER23 is the first Puerto Rico Tax Expenditure Report to include forecasts of the cost of tax expenditures beyond the most recently published national accounts data. At the time of completion of this Report in March of 2022, national accounts data were available only through fiscal year 2021. Therefore, forecasts of nominal GNP produced by the Financial Oversight Management Board (FOMB) of Puerto Rico were used to extrapolate tax return data for tax years 2022 and 2023. These FOMB forecasts of nominal GNP will underlie the estimates of tax receipts and government expenditures in the 2023 Budget of Puerto Rico. Therefore, the same assumptions about the growth in nominal GNP through 2023 will underlie both the Budget of Puerto Rico and PRTER23.

It should be noted that tax receipts in the budget are on a fiscal year basis (eg: fiscal year 2023 includes July 2022 through June 2023) while the cost of tax expenditures in this Report are shown on a tax year basis. The tax year is very close to a calendar year basis because the tax liabilities that appear on the tax returns filed by most taxpayers in Puerto Rico coincide with the calendar year. We hope that we will be able to show the cost of tax expenditures on a fiscal year receipts basis in future PRTERs as more information becomes available from the new tax return reporting system, SURI.

Table III-1 below shows a summary of the sources of data used to estimate the cost of tax expenditures by tax regime and by tax year.

PB = national accounts data from The Puerto Rico Planning Board
 FOMB = forecasts of nominal dollar GNP from the Financial Oversight and Management Board for Puerto Rico

All estimates of the cost of tax expenditures based on tax returns are final estimates. When national accounts data is used as an extrapolator, the cost estimates will be revised as tax returns become available. National accounts data itself is on a revision cycle so that it is possible that the national accounts will be revised between the publication of two PRTERs while tax returns are still not available; these national accounts revisions may give rise to revisions of the cost of tax expenditures appearing in this Report. Finally, the cost of tax expenditures extrapolated by FOMB forecasts will be revised as Planning Board measures of the national accounts become available to replace FOMB forecasts of GNP.

Listed immediately below are the types of tax returns and the techniques used to estimate the cost of tax expenditures for each of the tax regimes include in this Report.

III-D.(a) Individual Income Taxes

Data – Individual income tax returns.

Technique – A microsimulation model run against the population of individual tax returns.

III-D.(b) Business Income Taxes

Data – Business income tax returns and informative returns.

Technique –

For corporations, a large-scale microsimulation model is run against the population of regular corporation tax returns. A separate microsimulation model is run against incentive corporation tax returns.

For non-corporate business including partnerships and special partnerships information on the various tax expenditures were obtained from informative returns. Estimates of the portion of those deductions, exemptions, etc. that were taxed on the returns of the owners of the non-corporate businesses (regular corporations, incentive corporations and individuals) were made in order to calculate the revenue cost of each tax expenditure.

Technique for Depreciation –

A perpetual inventory model employing investment from the National Accounts of Puerto Rico allows the calculation of both economic depreciation and tax depreciation.

For this Report economic depreciation is defined as depreciation measured using the depreciation patterns used by the Bureau of Economic Analysis of the United States Department of Commerce to obtain the depreciation shown in the United States National Accounts. These depreciation patterns rely on a geometric rate of decline in the value of the fixed asset that most closely resembles the change in the market value of the fixed asset. Forty classes of fixed assets in Puerto Rico were depreciated over 40 geometric depreciation patterns to obtain economic depreciation. These same forty classes of assets were depreciated using the depreciation patterns allowed under the tax law to obtain tax depreciation.

The difference in these two measures of depreciation, economic and tax, is distributed to their business owners by tax regime (regular corporate, incentive corporate or pass-through entities) in order to determine the cost of the tax expenditure for depreciation in each tax regime.

III-D.(c) Sale and Use Taxes

Data – Sales and Use tax returns, importation tax returns.

Technique – Based on the tax return data repository (sales and imports) and statistics from the Department of Labor (Expenditure Basket), Puerto Rico Planning Board (GASTCON), among others.

III-D.(d) Excise Taxes

Data - Excise tax return data.

Technique – The dollar amount of the exempt good is multiplied by the appropriate excise tax rate.

IV. IDENTIFICATION OF TAX EXPENDITURES AND BENCHMARKING

Tax expenditures are identified by reference to benchmark tax law. The benchmark law is characterized by four fundamental aspects of the tax system including: the tax base, the tax rate, the unit of taxation and the period of taxation. Any departure from this benchmark that reduces taxes is considered a “tax expenditure”. This broad approach provides greater transparency by ensuring that information is being disclosed on a wide range of tax measures.

Note that this Report does not include tax expenditures under Act 154. This is because there is no underlying economic or tax concept as to the type of economic activity that is taxed under Act 154. Act 154 was designed simply to raise a certain amount of revenues and the base of the tax as well as the credits were chosen to achieve that revenue target. Therefore, there is no benchmark concept from which departures can be identified and there are no tax expenditures.

Appearing below is a description of the benchmark for each of the four tax regimes for which tax expenditures estimates are presented in this Report.

IV-A Income Taxes In General

The tax base for both the individual and business income taxes are patterned on a comprehensive income tax, which defines “income” as the sum of: (i) consumption and, (ii) the change in net wealth in a given period of time. However, there is an exception to this definition of income in order to arrive at the normative baseline from which departures are measured as tax expenditures.

The normative income tax baseline only includes income when it is realized. The unrealized capital gains on both assets and debt are not included in the normative income tax baseline. Thus, the deferral of tax on unrealized capital gains is not regarded as a tax expenditure. Departures from this normative income tax baseline are tax expenditures for both individual and business income. An example of such a departure is the deductibility of charitable contributions for individuals (See TEB-4 in the tables appearing in Section VI. The Tax Expenditure Budget). The normative individual income tax baseline would not allow a deduction for any personal expenditures, including charitable contributions. In contrast the PRIRC Section 1033.15(a)(3)(A) allows a deduction in the amount of contributions or gifts made during the tax year to, or for use by, non-profit organizations. This generates a tax expenditure.

IV-B Individual Income Taxes

Tax Base - The normative individual income tax baseline allows personal exemptions, a standard deduction, and deduction of expenses incurred in earning income.

Rate – The tax rate is the progressive rate structure in existence for each tax year at the time of the Report. This means that the progressive tax rate structure (including brackets, standard deduction and personal exemptions) is not a tax expenditure. Treasury has determined that the credit (calculated as a percentage reduction in tax liabilities) introduced in Act 257-2018 and revised in Act 60-2019 is an adjustment to the progressive rate structure as is the revision to the Basic Alternate Tax Rates and therefore do not themselves give rise to tax expenditures.

Unit of Taxation – The individual.

Period of Taxation – The calendar year.

Notes on Individual Income Taxes –

Schedule B Credits – Schedule B credits are tax credits available to businesses. A subset of the Schedule B credits are those tax credits generated by businesses that have no tax liabilities and which may transfer such tax credits to third parties. Business entities in a loss position and no tax liabilities but entitled to such tax credits can raise cash by selling the same (at a discount) to other businesses or individuals who may use them to reduce their income tax liabilities. In these cases, the benefit of the tax credit is shared between the business that generated the tax credit and the business or individual purchaser of the credit. In this Report there is no attempt to share out the benefit of the credit between the seller and the acquirer of the tax credit. Instead the Schedule B credits are shown as a tax expenditure in the tax regime (individual or business) where the credit was claimed.

IV-C Business Income Taxes

Tax Base – The normative business income tax baseline allows expenses incurred in earning income. Expenses incurred in earning income include wages, depreciation deductions and certain other expenses that are incurred in earning income. The separate corporate tax system is considered part of the normative business income tax baseline and does not by itself generate a tax expenditure.

Rate – The tax rate is the progressive rate structure in existence for each tax year at the time of the Report. This means that the progressive tax rate structure is not a tax expenditure. Treasury has determined that the optional tax computation for self-employed individuals and corporations that was introduced in the Act 257- 2018 is an adjustment to the tax rate structure and does not itself give rise to tax expenditures. Similarly, the reduction in the normal tax rate for corporations introduced in Act 257- 2018 does not give rise to tax expenditures.

Unit of Taxation – The legal business entity.

Period of Taxation – The fiscal year of the taxpayer.

Notes on Business Income Taxes -

Non-Corporate Business –

The income of non-corporate businesses (frequently referred to as pass-through entities) is attributed to the owner and is taxed on his tax return at the appropriate tax rate. This Report includes the cost of tax expenditures for non-corporate businesses in the form of partnerships and special partnerships. In the PRTER business entities are divided by legal form between: (i) corporations including regular corporations, incentive corporations and corporations of individuals and (ii) non-corporate businesses including partnerships, special partnerships and sole proprietorships reporting their income on Schedules K (Industry or Business Income), L (Farming Income), M (Professions and Commissions Income) and N (Rental Income) of the individual tax return. This report does not include tax expenditures for corporations of individuals or sole proprietors because no recent data is available for these entities. It is expected that a future PRTER will contain such estimates.

Non-Corporate business income tax expenditures include tax expenditures such as deductions, exemptions, etc. that are taken on the non-corporate business tax return. Other than credits, these tax expenditures will lower the income that is passed through to the owner and is taxed on his return. For example, a partnership may deduct a charitable contribution on his partnership return that may lower the income passed to its owner who may be an individual. The individual owner may also take a charitable contribution on his individual tax return that will also lower his taxable income. For purposes of classifying these tax expenditures by tax regime in this Report, the charitable contribution the partnership deducts appears in this Report as a non-corporate business tax expenditure while the charitable contribution that the owner takes on his individual tax return appears in this Report as an individual income tax expenditure. Credits generated by the partnerships are considered non corporate business tax expenditures even though the generally will be passed on to the owners to be used on their tax returns.

Depreciation –

The comprehensive income tax base forming the benchmark allows a deduction for economic depreciation. Economic depreciation is defined as the change in the market value of the fixed asset over the course of the year. This definition of economic depreciation is consistent with the notion of a comprehensive income tax that includes the change in net wealth since the change in the market value of fixed assets is part of the change in net wealth. For this report, economic depreciation in Puerto Rico is assumed to have the same pattern of depreciation as the Bureau of Economic Analysis of the United States Department of Commerce uses to determine economic depreciation in the United States. These depreciation patterns rely on a geometric rate of decline in the value of the fixed asset that most closely resembles the change in the market value of the fixed asset. However, the tax law allows various methods of depreciation some of which accelerate that depreciation deduction. The higher depreciation deduction taken in the earlier years of an assets life under accelerated depreciation rules in the tax law creates a deferral of taxes which is a tax expenditure given to encourage investment in Puerto Rico.

Most of investment in Puerto Rico is depreciated for tax purposes using patterns of depreciation provided under either Section 1033.07 of the PRIRC or Section 1040.12 of the PRIRC or the Incentive Acts. Section 1033.07, referred to as "Current Depreciation" generally provides depreciation patterns that follow a straight-line depreciation formula. Generally, this depreciation pattern is similar to that provided by economic depreciation. Therefore, for this Report, we do not consider depreciation deductions under Section 1033.07 a departure from the normative business income tax baseline and thus it does not create a tax expenditure. Section 1040.12 referred to as the "Accelerated Cost Recovery Depreciation Method" generally provides depreciation patterns that follow a declining balance formula. As the term implies accelerated depreciation deductions allow higher depreciation deductions in the early years of an assets life than does economic depreciation and thus create a deferral of taxes which is a tax expenditure included in this Report.

The Incentive Acts (e.g.: Act 73, Section 4(b)) allow a special form of accelerated depreciation for incentive businesses that allows the entire investment to be deducted in the year of purchase. This also creates a tax expenditure included in this Report.

Note that expensing under Act 83-2010, "The Green Energy Incentives Act of Puerto Rico" creates a tax expenditure that is not included in this Report. We hope to include this tax expenditure in a future report.

IV-C Sale and Use Taxes

Tax Base - The normative tax base for sales and use taxes is total personal consumption occurring in Puerto Rico. Any departure from this normative tax base is considered a tax expenditure. For example, the Exemption for Prescription Drugs (See TEB-251 in the tables appearing in Section V. The Tax Expenditure Budget) is a tax expenditure. The sales and use tax normative baseline is personal consumption expenditures which includes the purchase by individuals of prescription drugs. In contrast, the PRIRC Section 4030.12 exempts medicines for human consumption that may be acquired solely or exclusively under a medical prescription (Rx products) including the jars and lids security tags and bags inherent to the office of prescription drugs from the sales and use tax. This departure from the normative tax base generates a tax expenditure.

Rate – The benchmark tax rate is 10 percent.

Unit of Taxation – The seller or importer pays the tax (although the burden of the tax falls on the consumer).

Period of Taxation – Taxes are due either when the good or service is imported or when it is sold to the consumer.

Notes on Sales and Use Taxes –

Since the benchmark tax base for the Sales and Use Tax is personal consumption, the taxation of business to business transactions, such as the tax on services sold from one business to another, is not part of the benchmark tax base. Such sales and use taxes are an addition to the benchmark tax base that yield additional tax revenues. Thus, the general exemption of business to business sales from the tax base is not a tax expenditure. This contrasts with, for example, an exemption for food items, whose consumption is part of the benchmark tax base; making their exemption a tax expenditure.

IV-D Excise Taxes

Tax Base - The normative tax base is the total production and importation of the goods being taxed.

Rate – The benchmark tax rate differs by product and is the standard rate under the law for that product.

Unit of Taxation – The producer or seller pays the tax (although) the burden of the tax falls on the consumer.)

Period of Taxation – Taxes are due at the time that the goods enter inventory.

V. FUTURE EDITIONS OF THE PRTER

PRTER23 provides cost estimates of tax expenditures for tax year 2023 in early April of 2022 just as work on the fiscal year 2023 budget, is commencing. It is the intention of Treasury to publish all future PRTERs in the period between January and March in time for their use with the June budget exercise.

Each edition of the PRTER will include cost estimates for tax expenditures for additional taxable years as well as revisions to prior taxable year estimates. Each edition of the PRTER will also include new or repealed tax expenditures that were effective for the tax years included in the PRTER. For example, if legislation were passed in 2023 that created new tax expenditures with an effective date of January 1, 2024, PRTER24 would include those newly created tax expenditures.

Finally, in future editions of the PRTER Treasury hopes to be able to provide estimates of foregone revenues for tax expenditures that for a variety of reasons were not included in this Report. An example is tax expenditures for non-corporate business reported on Schedules K, L, M and N of the individual tax return. Treasury will also continue to examine the feasibility of producing cost estimates of tax expenditures on a fiscal year receipts basis.

VI. THE TAX EXPENDITURE BUDGET

The Tax Expenditure Budget ("TEB") is a list of tax expenditures along with the revenue foregone due to each tax expenditure. The TEB also includes a description of each tax expenditure and a legal citation for the statutory provision that created the tax expenditure.

In the TEB each tax expenditure is identified by a TEB number that uniquely identifies that tax expenditure. For example, the mortgage interest deduction available to individuals for income tax purposes is TEB-1. There are 463 tax expenditures included in this Report each uniquely identified by its TEB number.

The TEB numbering system has been modified for this Report. In the 2018 Report the TEB numbers shown in the 2017 Report were revised in order to be able to include new tax expenditures and yet retain the consecutive numbering of tax expenditures in each tax regime. Starting with PRTER23 permanent numbers are assigned to each tax expenditure. As new tax expenditures are added due to tax legislation, the next available TEB number will be assigned to the new tax expenditures. Repealed tax expenditures retain their number so that they continue to be uniquely identified by TEB number. As a result, the TEB numbers appearing in a tax regime will not be consecutive. However, the permanent nature of the TEB numbers will allow readers to identify a tax expenditure by its number in the 2023 Report and all future tax expenditure reports and thus more easily construct time series of tax expenditure costs. This Report includes tax expenditures and their cost estimates for all the tax expenditures extant from 2017 through 2023 making it unnecessary to refer to the earlier Reports in order to obtain a complete list of tax expenditures or a complete time series of their costs.

Act 257-2018 and Act 60-2019 both created new tax expenditures and repealed tax expenditures. The table below lists the count of newly created and repealed tax expenditures as well as the TEB numbers of those tax expenditures cross classified by tax regime and Act. Further details about the tax expenditures can be obtained by cross-referencing the TEB numbers in this table with the information appearing in Tables 4, 4A and 5 below.

Act 60-2019 consolidated prior law pertaining to incentive acts into a single code. The TEB numbers specifying tax expenditures created by the incentive code did not change as a result of that consolidation. However, the legal citations in Table 5 now include references to Act 60-2019 as well as the original Acts creating the tax expenditure.

Total	9		6		11		20

Each tax expenditure is classified into three major categories including the tax regime, the type of tax expenditure and the budget category.

The tax regime classification is one of the four tax regimes described in Section V above, they include:

- Individual Income Tax;
- Business Income Tax (including sub-regimes regular corporate, incentive corporate and non-corporate);

Sales and Use Tax;
Excise Taxes.

The type of tax expenditure refers to the accounting form that the tax expenditure takes. Six types of tax expenditures are included in this Report including:

- Credit
- Deduction
- Exclusion
- Exemption
- Preferential Rate
- Deferral of Taxes

The budget category refers to a policy grouping that is similar to the groupings shown in the Budget of Puerto Rico on a more detailed basis. The budget categories include:

- |  |  |
| 1. Art, culture, sport & recreation    | 2. Business farming and fishing                            |

Six tables appear in the Tax Expenditure Budget. Tables 1, 2 and 3 are summary tables that show the count of tax expenditures cross-classified among the three major classification categories. Table 1 cross-classifies the count of tax expenditures into tax regime and type of expenditure. Table 2 cross-classifies the count of tax expenditures into tax regime and budget category. Table 3 cross-classifies the count of tax expenditures into tax regime (with incentive act and excise tax detail) and type of tax expenditure. Table 4, 4A and 5 list each tax expenditure separately. Table 4 shows the foregone revenue for each of the tax expenditures for tax year 2017 through 2023 organized by tax regime, and within tax regime organized by type of tax expenditure. A column in Table 4 shows the budget category of the tax expenditure. Table 4A presents the same information as Table 4 but organizes the information by budget category. Table 5 repeats the ordering of Table 4 but shows both the legal citation of the law creating the tax expenditure and a short description of the law and the data source for the estimate of foregone revenue. The TEB identification number shown on both Tables 4 and 5 can be used to cross-reference the foregone revenue with the law citation and description. The descriptions of tax measures contained in Table 5 are intended to provide only a general understanding of how each of the tax measures operates. These descriptions do not replace the relevant legislation or regulations and should not be relied upon by taxpayers in arranging their tax affairs.

Tables 1, 2 and 3 exclude repealed tax expenditures from the body of the Table. A separate row indicating the count of repealed tax expenditures appears in the next to last row of Tables 1 and 2 and a grand total of repealed and available tax expenditures appears at the bottom of those Tables. While Tables 4, 4A and 5 include all the tax expenditures that were available in any of the tax years 2017 through 2023, whether or not they were repealed. In Table 4, tax expenditures that were repealed in the period covered by this Report are indicated by an "rpl" entry in the tax years for which they were repealed. New tax expenditures that were created during the period covered by this Report are indicated by a blank cell in the tax years prior to their existence.

This table classifies the count of tax expenditures in each regime into its type of tax expenditure for tax year 2023. For example, reading across the second line of Table 1, businesses can claim 261 different tax expenditures, 86 of which are the credit type of tax expenditure.

Table 3 is similar to Table 1 in that it classifies the count of tax expenditures in each regime into its type of tax expenditure, but Table 3 also provides detail below the tax regime level showing the cross-classification by type of tax expenditure for each of the incentive acts, for non-corporate business and for detailed excise taxes for 2023. For example, reading across the fifth line of Table 3, there are 3 tax expenditures that can be claimed by businesses under the incentive acts for the "Film and Creative Industry, 2 of which are the preferential tax rate type of expenditures.

Table 4- Revenue Foregone by Tax Expenditure, by Tax Regime, by Type of Tax Expenditure and by Budget Category

This table can be considered the main table in this Report. It shows the foregone revenue for each of the 463 tax expenditures ordered by TEB number and organized by tax regime, and within tax regime organized by type of tax expenditure for tax years 2017 through 2023. The Tables also shows the budget category of the tax expenditure. For example, the first line of this Table shows that the revenue foregone from tax expenditure TEB-1, the home mortgage interest deduction for individuals, is included in the housing budget category and is $199.3 million dollars in 2017 and $207.1 million dollars in 2018 and so on through 2023.
